

What You Need to Know About Me

You wanna know about me?

I already know about you.

I step forward,

You jab me from behind.

I break from the crowd,

You shove me back in line.

Because you're too fucking scared to try.

You can't bring yourself up,

So you push others down.

And you run

You hide

You vandalise

the world that gave you everything—

The tools, the time:

To create

To make

To write.

Men with nothing to their name

Crafted cities with ink and flames.

Songs

Poems

Art.

Words that still echo centuries later,

So you could be something, someone.
Yet you sit there
Stewing in your chair.
You keep burning libraries for warmth—
Just to feel something.

You mock me,
Because you can see me,
Because I'm risking something. Because my trying Forces you to admit
You're not.

But you'll see.
I'll keep building.
And you'll keep falling.
And one day,
You'll notice the distance.
